DISCLOSURE ADVISORY

For the person named above, whom the People may call as a witness, please be advised as follows.

The New York City Police Department (NYPD) substantiated an allegation that Orlando Valerio failed to prepare a complaint report. On January 25, 2019, a complainant reported to NYPD in substance that Officer Valerio and another officer responded to a 911 call, and that after hearing the story of the incident, the other officer stated that he did not believe the victim was attacked and that she was mentally ill, and refused to prepare a complaint report. Officer Valerio affirmed during a department interview that he did not prepare a complaint report or an aided report for what was later revealed to be a confirmed assault which resulted in significant injury. Officer Valerio improperly assessed the victim's injury as a medical condition, and his articulation for not taking a report was inadequate. Even if Officer Valerio felt that the victim suffered from a medical condition rather than an injury, at minimum an aided report was required upon the aided's removal to the hospital.
